The word “art” has a set of definitions, characteristics and peculiarities but each person imagines and interprets it in a special way. People sometimes ask questions, “Is Dalí’s painting art? And Shakespeare’s sonnets?” and without hesitation or doubt they give a positive answer to these questions. It was so during the years of war. People were morally exhausted and suffered under the burden of losses. And when there was no force to fight and there was no force to live, art gave confidence to people, brought into the atmosphere of ruin and panic some inexpressible atmosphere of warmth and care, gave people “second wind” and made them live again, love and fight for happiness. An art therapist and member of the art therapy faculty at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago, Allen gives excellent instructions on using image-making as a way to understand personal fears, dreams, and identity while giving us a look at her own life and image-making process. Especially useful for nonartists, Allen’s text explains which art materials to purchase and how to begin a drawing or sculpture. It is like a guide book or a manual for those interested in self-exploration through creative activity. Allen persistently invites the reader to join her. I found her to be an encouraging and competent guide. “It’s American Journal of Art Therapy.
