This book presents an ethnographic study of the experiences of teenage boys in an Australian high school. It follows a group of thirteen to fifteen year-olds. Along with his theoretical framework, observations, and conclusions about the students, the author intertwines the experience of being an ethnographer in an environment where he had been an "insider" for many years. - Reference and Research Book News. "In short, the text encompasses valuable ideas and perspectives for anyone seeking to understand a different way of reading a well-established discourse." - Garth Stahl, Gender and Education. "...It is impossible to close our eyes, because children's cruelty sometimes goes beyond the boundaries." This story is about bullying and school. It is about badgering, intimidation, and harassment. This word is new for people but the phenomenon remains the same. According to the U.N. using 2006 data, every tenth student is experienced the act of violence in the school. Moreover, this figure is rising. More and more frequently we can see many frightening titles in the mass media: "The teenagers posted the video of beating their classmate" or "The girl committed suicide because of the bullying in the school."

The problem of bullying is a modern and acute social issue. If there is a clear and repeating pattern to your experiences or relationships that provides clues to where you could improve, then use that information to your advantage. Explore where relationships broke down or what you have been criticized for. Use everything you've learned to become someone else. Make choices that will move you closer to your goal of becoming a new person. Try on different qualities from people you admire.