Thomas Bailey Aldrich. 11 November 1836, American. Around the 15th and 16th centuries, in England and France, long news accounts called "relations" were published; in Spain they were called "relaciones". Single event news publications were printed in the broadsheet format, which was often posted. The news circulated between newsletters through well-established channels in 17th century Europe. Antwerp was the hub of two networks, one linking France, Britain, Germany, and the Netherlands; the other linking Italy Spain and Portugal. Favorite topics included wars, military affairs, diplomacy, and court business and gossip.[6]. Most of the international news was distributed through the Havas agency, which was largely controlled by the government.[19]. Britain[edit]. Main article: History of journalism in the United Kingdom.
